NATIONAL SCHOOL FOOD SUMMIT

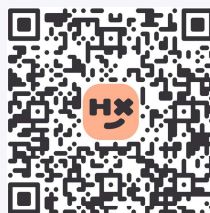

Across Australia, schools, communities, and organisations are finding innovative ways to ensure every child has access to nutritious food at school. The inaugural National School Food Summit brings together leaders, organisations, practitioners, policymakers, and researchers to explore how collaboration and partnership create stronger, more sustainable food programs that support student health, wellbeing and learning.

Hosted in Tasmania by School Food Matters, in collaboration with Federation of Canteens in Schools this forum will highlight the power of working together — from government and education sectors to community organisations, producers, and food service operators — to build a cohesive national discussion around food in schools.

Through keynote presentations, panel discussions, and interactive workshops, participants will share insights, celebrate successes, and identify opportunities to strengthen partnerships across regions and sectors.

Join us in Tasmania to connect, collaborate, and contribute to a national conversation about the future of food in schools — where shared goals, and collaboration are the key ingredients for success.

Details on the event program will be coming out early 2026. To secure your spot and register, please visit us at National School Food Summit or follow the QR code on the flyer.
